VERBAL DESCRIPTION:

Fragments of a hollow, zoomorphic, mold-made figurine. The zoomorph appears to be a hippo and contains the eye, nostrils, mouth, front right leg, foot, and webbed claws, and the rounded underbelly of the beast. There is a rough scar on the belly - could this have been attached to something else? The bases of the foot and mouth are flat, but the belly is round. The eye is fully open - a complete ellipse with a protruding iris + a punctated pupil. The eyelid protrudes above the iris. The nostrils are located in the same design as the earholes on anthropomorphic figurines - doghairs. There is a slight thickness 2.1m in length. The surface is smooth and polished. It is a very cute figurine.
